Description

The T-28 was the first and last advanced trainer produced in quantity for training pilots for high-speed jet aircraft. Nearly 2000 of these fine trainers were built before production ended in 1957.

When asked of the war in South Vietnam, the T-28 was given a new lease on life when it proved to be effective "COIN" or counter insurgency aircraft against enemy forces operating in the dense tropical jungle. Flown by Vietnamese pilots, the T-28 usually also carried an American advisor observed on these combat missions.
